BIOGRAPHY

Alison Adams is a British mixed media and collage artist whose colourful, nature-inspired artworks explore the beauty, movement and rhythm of the natural world.

She combines acrylic paint, collage and expressive mark-making to produce richly layered compositions that balance spontaneity with careful design.

Originally trained as a dentist in both the UK and USA, Alison enjoyed a successful career in private practice in central London before exposure to an in-surgery mercury spill forced her to quit. During a long period of ill health, she retrained as a naturopath in order to recover her own health, publishing a book and ran a couple of informative websites. Now, in 'retirement' she has returned to the creative interests that have inspired her since childhood, establishing herself as a professional artist.

Drawing inspiration from gardens, wildlife, woodland and the changing seasons, Alison's work reflects both close observation and imaginative interpretation. Her intuitive creative process allows many of her artworks to evolve organically, resulting in distinctive contemporary pieces that combine vibrant colour, intricate texture and decorative elegance.

Her work has received numerous awards and has been exhibited throughout the UK. It has also appeared in respected publications including Cotswold Life and on the cover of the Ethics & Human Research Journal. Alison's artwork is represented internationally through Saatchi Art and Singulart, and domestically through Spencer House Gallery, while original pieces, prints and books are available directly from her website.

Whether creating intimate botanical studies or larger statement pieces, Alison aims to produce uplifting artwork that brings warmth, beauty and a lasting connection with nature into people's homes.

ARTIST STATEMENT

*Nature has always been my greatest

Rather than attempting to reproduce the landscape exactly as I see it, I use colour, collage and layered texture to capture the feelings and memories that nature evokes. My process is often intuitive, allowing an artwork to develop naturally, embracing the 'happy accidents' along the way.

Working primarily in acrylic paint and collage, I enjoy balancing expressive freedom with careful composition, creating artworks that are both contemporary and timeless.

My hope is that each piece offers viewers a moment of calm, curiosity and joy while celebrating the remarkable beauty of the natural world.
